DocComs empowers medical staff to discuss treatment and manage both patients and workflow easily on their mobile phones.

Founded by NHS trauma surgeon Matt Jaggard out of frustration at the lack of communication tools available to emergency doctors, DocComs is fast becoming the leading intelligent, intuitive and well-designed solution for healthcare workers.

As Matt explains in Sky's Digital Transformation: eHealthcare Solutions, DocComs is intuitive for doctors and all healthcare workers, delivering a platform that speeds up workflow by allowing medics to communicate vital information immediately and securely.

Endorsed by top consultants across all fields, DocComs enables them to create task and patient lists, view high quality images and manage their caseloads, all via their mobile phones and on the move.

DocComs improves patient information handovers, eliminates risks associated with lost hard copy patient lists and, most importantly, allows healthcare workers to know they are GDPR compliant at all times.

"It's transformed the way we all work," Matt says. "As a busy trauma surgeon, I know that I have all the information I need to hand on my phone. It's secure, immediate and gives us peace of mind."

DocComs is free to access for all healthcare workers – just download it from the App Store and it's ready to go.

Matt founded DocComs to improve communication between hospital staff, designing the ideal solution for doctors, teams and hospital systems with the overarching aim to improve patient care. Currently a trauma surgeon at Lewisham Hospital in London, Matt advises DocComs on clinical and administrative best practice.
