The Centre for Contemporary Art is delighted to present our summer exhibition with Bojana Janković and a collaboration between Tom O'Dea and Frank Sweeney. Ballads of Rhinestones & Newcomers brings together two counterpointing experiences of the border between the UK and Republic of Ireland at a time when the realities of Brexit are playing out.

2 Channel Land by Frank Sweeney and Tom O'Dea looks at the history of analogue radio and television signals spilling across the borders of these islands. Reflecting the complex spatial territories that were produced by transmitters and their environment, the work takes the form of a radio sculpture that permeates the gallery. Moving through the space using handheld radios, the sculpture presents an archive of audience memories, border pirate radio stations and TV deflector systems built by communities to capture and retransmit signals from across the border.

Bojana Janković is an Eastern European artist based in NI. She explores complex relationships between migration, displaced identities, migrant labour and discrimination. Bojana's socially engaged performances and installation in the exhibition centre the migrant experience of the invisible border in stark contrast to the free-ranging radio signals. Her new work The Uncommon (Travel Area) follows public buses as they make their way across the island of Ireland. The buses - run by Translink and Bus Éireann - are everyday evidence of the CTA in action, connecting people across an invisible, frictionless border. That is, as the artist writes, "Unless you are an immigrant. Then you might need a visa. You might need to notify the Gardaí or the Home Office. You might need to do this four times in ten minutes." The Uncommon charts the hard border experienced by migrants as it is performed and conjured up daily: every time a bus crosses the border, an immigration stamp is added to the wall in a performance piece by the artist taking place during the launch and final week of the exhibition. During the exhibition's run, the stamps will be made available to immigrants to allow further crossings to be recorded.

A series of events will accompany the exhibition including oral-history collections with Frank Sweeney and Tom O'Dea and performances of The Uncommon (Travel Area) by Bojana Janković at the launch of the exhibition on 19 June 2022, 7-8pm and again on 20 September 2022, from noon.
