LONDON, UK – Nov 2, 2021 - Westmont Hub at the University of West London has entered into a shareholding agreement with Workscan - a rising company headed by one of UWL's former students. This successful joining is part of the launch campaign for the soon-to-be-released platform.

As one of the top modern university in London (Guardian League Tables 2022), UWL is no stranger to innovative ideas and ground-breaking business models from the bright young minds it helps to mould. One such mind is Ioannis Antypas, the CEO & Founder of the exciting new industrial placements portal, Workscan.

Having graduated from the elite Information Technology Management for Business course with a first-class honour's degree, Mr. Antypas was always destined for great things. His latest entrepreneurial endeavour has caught the attention of a lot of important institutions - including the very one that gave him his wings.

What Is Workscan?

Workscan is a revolutionary platform designed to connect students and placements. It is aimed at students looking to gain valuable work experience and employers interested in working with fresh new talents and helping to develop the future of their industries.

Students can browse available placements and apply for the positions that appeal to them. The Workscan platform acts as an independent virtual platform for the whole thing, streamlining the entire process.

Workscan – University of West London Connection

The beginnings of this game-changing platform were founded in the very halls of the UWL. Mr. Antypas developed the operation as part of his final year project, and it directly contributed to his distinct success. Since graduating, the self-confessed serial entrepreneur has readied the program for launch - something the successful shareholding agreement with the university is sure to propel to dizzying heights.

The announcement comes as no surprise to anyone who has had the privilege of watching the Workscan platform develop. It has been touted as a future success since its inception during the CEO's time at the school.

The Bottom Line: When Does It Launch?

Workscan is now available for pre-registration. Users are invited to join the waitlist and the many others who are eagerly anticipating the grand opening. The company has not yet confirmed an exact launch date, which only adds to the appeal! Registered wait-listers are not only granted priority access when the platform opens for business, but they are also promised the first heads up when the time comes to cut the ribbon and launch Workscan into the world of industrial placement!
